

Session # 5: Action Guide

Oh yeah... About Sabotage...

Sabotage can come from two directions:

- The behavior of my friends, co-workers, colleagues, and family,
- My own inner rebellion.

Others watching me venture into this healthier lifestyle may make comments, or they may rebel against me. I may notice that some people close to me feel threatened when I embark on this kind of journey and they will tempt me with food and activities I'm trying to move away from.

Sometimes I may feel guilty that they feel threatened (it's NOT my fault that they feel bad) and sabotage myself to be accepted.

These reactions boil down to fear.

Fear of not being loved.

Others, without the courage to take such a bold step may unconsciously hope I fail. My success would be uncomfortably challenging. When I take a step toward valuing myself more, my relationships are forced to shift. My own rebellion is often based on my own fear of change, of taking responsibility for my life.

What if I no longer could hide behind excuses for not becoming anything I want to become? For not allowing myself to really be who I truly am?

I will Make this training work for me by taking responsibility for myself and how my life turns out.

My Action steps for this week are:

- 1.
- 2.
- 3.
